Let's Start!

Pronunciation Spot: It's time to give a presentation!

Learning Outcome

Accurately use important information about people's jobs and places of work in communicative situations.

Can Do Statements

- I can give a presentation.
- I can talk about what is acceptable.
- I can identify key content words.

Ask your partner:

- Do you enjoy giving presentations? Why or why not?
- What is acceptable to do during a presentation?
- What is not acceptable to do during a presentation?

Let's Explore!

Miranda gives a presentation ... as well as some possible scenarios. What are they?

* "Scenarios" are situations that could possibly happen.

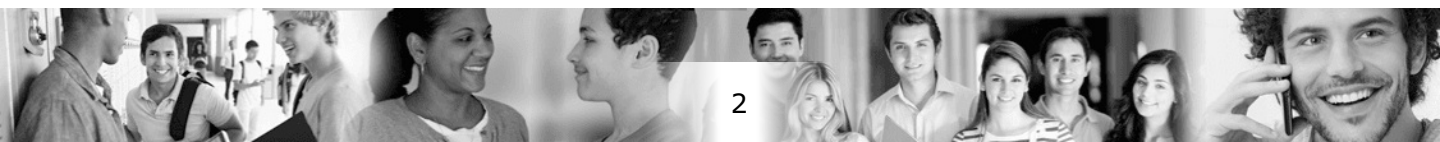

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Hello, everyone. I'd like to start by welcoming you all here today. My name is Miranda Morehouse, and I'm the marketing manager of Polygon. We are excited to expand our client's product to the South American market, and we feel it would be helpful to have some knowledge about business etiquette in the new cross-cultural setting.

Let me begin by presenting a short outline of my talk. First, I will discuss greetings and open conversation. Then I'll outline a few considerations important at a meeting. After that, I will discuss expectations of time and punctuality. Finally, I will discuss understandings of honesty.

Now in both North and South America, it is appropriate to shake hands and make direct eye contact when meeting someone for the first time. One small detail to note is that a South American man usually waits for a woman to initiate a handshake. Meanwhile, this custom is no longer relevant in North America. Some small talk is made in both cultures, but a South American is usually more personable. For instance, it is normal for a North American to discuss the weather, but it is common for a South American to ask after a person's health or family. At this point, why don't we break into small groups and practice a few scenarios? I will hand out cards which identify you as a North or South American.

Let's Practice!

What does Miranda stress*? Does it have to do with the new cross-cultural setting?

*Content words are "stressed". Nouns, adjectives, and adverbs are all considered content words.

"cross cultural" is an adjective that means involving two or more different cultures.

Instructions: Read the sentences aloud. Underline all the words that are stressed in each sentence. Compare your pronunciation with a partner. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

- 1) Let me begin by presenting a short outline of my talk.
- 2) First, I will discuss greetings and opening conversation.
- 3) Then I'll outline a few considerations important at a meeting.
- 4) After that, I will discuss expectations of time and punctuality.
- 5) Finally, I will discuss understandings of honesty.

Let's Practice!

What is acceptable in that part of the world? Can you give me an example*?

*Another way to say "for example" is "for instance."

Instructions: Read the presentation again. Write: acceptable in North America, acceptable in South America, acceptable in both North America and South America.

- 1) Shake hand and make direct eye contact when meeting someone for the first time.
- 2) Wait for a woman to initiate a handshake.
- 3) Make chatter.
- 4) Discuss the weather.
- 5) Ask about a person's health or family.

Extension Activity

Let's practice giving a presentation!

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Choose a topic you are interested in and want to learn more about.
- Go on the Internet and do some research on the topic. Make some notes.
- Use your notes and create an outline for a presentation. Remember to include: an opening, an introduction to your topic, an overview of your presentation, at least 3 important points and a closing.
- When you finish your outline, practice your presentation aloud.
- Deliver your presentation to your class. Remember to stress content words and ask your class if they have any questions!

Learning Points

Giving Presentations

When delivering presentations, it is important to outline and organize what to say. We use:

- would like to + verb and the Present Simple to introduce yourself and welcome the audience.
- "Hello everyone. I would like to start by welcoming everyone. My name is Jim Wilson and I'm an HR expert."
- Present Simple, will, and going to, to set the theme and introduce what you will be presenting.
- "The purpose of this presentation is to introduce our new learning software, which is going to be released in two days."
- "Today I 'm going to talk about challenges and opportunities our company is facing."
- will to give the audience a general outline of the presentation and sequence words such as first, then, after that, finally.
- "First, I will discuss some statistics and numbers. Then, I will outline some important points to be taken into consideration."
- What-clauses can also be used to introduce topics and outline your presentation.
- "What we're going to look at today are some statistics and numbers."

Stressing Content Words

In English, we have two classes of words: content words and function words.

- Function words are words we use to make sentences grammatically correct. Pronouns, determiners, prepositions, and conjunctions are good examples.
- Content words are words that carry meaning. Nouns, adjectives, verbs and adverbs are all considered content words.

When speaking, we want the listener to have a better understanding of our story, so we make the content words easier to hear by pronouncing them strongly. In other words, we add stress to them. Function words, on the other hand, do not give the listener any relevant information. Therefore, they are not stressed.

Examples:

- Hello everyone. I'd like to start by welcoming everyone. My name is Marco de Angeli. I'm the head of marketing for All Foods.
- Let me begin by presenting a short outline of my talk. First, I will discuss greetings and opening conversation.
